RESTRICT INTERNET ACCESS

House Bill 4191 as introduced First Analysis (3-16-99)

Sponsor: Rep. Nancy Cassis
Committee: Local Government and Urban Affairs

THE APPARENT PROBLEM:

Young readers visit libraries to collect information from a variety of sources, often to complete school assignments. Among the many research tools available at the library is the Internet. Although the Internet provides access to a host of web sites that are educational, it also allows young people unlimited access to web sites that contain pornography and obscenity.

Libraries seldom deny Internet access, citing the need to guarantee free speech under the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. However, constitutional law recognizes different kinds of speech, and court opinions have been issued to place limits on certain forms of expression. As a result, limits to Internet access often are a matter of library policy. For example, a computer can be equipped with various levels of restriction, called filtering software, in order to prevent minors from viewing images and texts that could cause them psychological and emotional harm. And often, library patrons are asked to sign written 'use policies', agreeing to follow library rules which prohibit using computing resources to display obscene materials.

Many schools and some libraries use filtering software. In order to encourage more libraries to use filtering software, some have argued that a law is needed to alert local library boards to the fact that certain kinds of limits on speech are lawful, and in particular that access to Internet pornography can be limited, in order to protect young readers.

THE CONTENT OF THE BILL:

House Bill 4191 would amend the Library Privacy Act to allow the governing board of a library that offers Internet access services to the public to restrict access to minors. The governing board could restrict Internet access by providing the services in the following manner: a) by making available to people of any age computer terminals that are restricted from receiving obscene or pornographic material; b) by reserving to people 18 years of age or older, or to people under 18 who are accompanied by a parent or guardian, Internet access terminals that are not restricted from receiving any material.

House Bill 4191 would define "Internet" to mean a matrix of networks that connects computers around the world. Under the bill, "library" would be defined to mean a library that is established by the state; a county, city, township, village, school district, or other local unit of government or authority or combination of local units of governments and authorities; a community college district; a college or university; or any private library open to the public.

MCL 397.602

FISCAL IMPLICATIONS:

The House Fiscal Agency notes that the bill would have no fiscal impact on state government, but could have an impact on local units. The decision to make available Internet access computer terminals that are restricted from receiving obscene or pornographic material would be that of the local libraries' governing bodies. Depending on the Internet service already in place, costs could occur as a result of the need to purchase the filter software or to subscribe to the filter for a fee. (3-2-99)

ARGUMENTS:

For:

Like alcohol and drugs, pornography destroys lives. In order to protect children from pornographic or obscene images, texts, and virtual conversations--the kinds of experience that can unnecessarily trouble and could traumatize young lives--public libraries should be encouraged to restrict young readers' access to certain Internet web sites. This legislation allows that kind of restriction, but leaves to the discretion of the local library board how and what would be blocked. This bill meets four tests, each important to ensure its constitutionality and effectiveness: First, the bill acknowledges that there is a compelling state interest in protecting minor children; second, the bill is drafted narrowly to prevent access to pornographic and obscene websites only by minors (unless they are accompanied by an adult); third, the bill is permissive and not mandatory so that decisions to limit access are voluntary; and fourth, the bill ensures that local control is maintained, vesting the decision to limit access in the local library.

Response:

Libraries in Michigan can already restrict access to pornographic sites by their patrons who are minors. Indeed, the Michigan Library Association has distributed a sample policy document to its members, in order to help library boards restrict access in ways that are constitutional, and many have done so.

For:

It is difficult to overstate the devastating power of pornography when it is foisted or forced on young or tender minds. In order to prevent sexual predation, it is imperative that adults who value moral excellence as comprising virtue, goodness, morality, rectitude, and righteousness, work to support and model a public policy of caring and compassion; to ensure safety and prevent unnecessary harm; and to insist upon decency in our public squares, the public places where citizens young and old gather together, throughout our communities.

Against:

The Detroit Free Press, in an editorial dated 2-3-99, says that finding a way to shield kids from Internet smut is likely going to fall to parents and businesses, as it should. Any attempt to regulate it would infringe on free speech, and the fast evolution of the technology means any laws would become quickly outdated. The editorial notes that a U.S. district judge who recently blocked enforcement of the federal Child Online Protection Act, designed to keep pornography away from minors using the Internet, said he hated to delay anything that protects kids, but added, "Perhaps we do the minors of this country harm if First Amendment protections, which they will with age inherit fully, are chipped away in the name of their protection."

POSITIONS:

The Michigan Library Association supports the bill. 3-11-99

The Michigan Family Forum supports the bill. 3-11-99
