Senate Bill 773 (as reported without amendment)
Sponsor: Senator Buzz Thomas
Committee: Judiciary

CONTENT

The bill would amend the Michigan Penal Code to exclude a computer technician who reported a violation from the prohibition against and penalties for knowingly possessing child sexually abusive material; and provide that a computer technician who acted in good faith would be immune from civil liability for actions taken in reporting a violation. ("Computer technician" would mean a person who installs, maintains, troubleshoots, upgrades, or repairs computer hardware, software, personal computer networks, or peripheral equipment.)

Under the Code, knowingly possessing child sexually abusive material is a felony punishable by up to four years' imprisonment, a maximum fine of $10,000, or both. The prohibition and penalty do not apply to certain people, including a commercial film or photographic print processor who reports a violation. The bill also would exclude from the prohibition and criminal penalties a computer technician who reported a violation.

In addition, the identity of a film or photograph processor reporting a violation must remain confidential, and the processor is immune from civil liability for good faith actions taken in reporting the violation. Under the bill, if a computer technician did any of the following within the scope of his or her professional capacity or employment, the technician's identity would have to remain confidential, subject to disclosure only by judicial process or with his or her consent, and the technician would be immune from civil liability for taking that action:

- Reported to the local prosecuting attorney his or her knowledge or observation of an electronic visual image, computer-generated image, or picture or sound recording depicting a person whom the technician had reason to know or believe was a child engaged in a "listed sexual act" as defined in the Code.
- Furnished a copy of the image, picture, or sound recording to the prosecuting attorney.
- Kept the image, picture, or sound recording, according to the prosecutor's instructions.

FISCAL IMPACT

The bill would have little, if any, fiscal impact on State and local government. To the extent that it would decrease the number of offenders prosecuted and convicted for possessing child sexually abusive material by exempting computer technicians under certain circumstances, the bill could potentially decrease court and corrections costs.
