Senate Bill 365 (as enrolled)
Sponsor: Senator Bill Hardiman
Senate Committee: Government Operations
House Committee: Government Operations

PUBLIC ACT 209 of 2005

Date Completed: 3-8-06

RATIONALE

Richard H. Austin, who died in 2001, had a significant impact on the State in his various positions as a public servant. He is known for his accomplishments in the accounting field, as well as for his service as the Wayne County Auditor and the Secretary of State, and as a delegate to Michigan's Constitutional Convention. In order to remember and honor Richard H. Austin, whom some have called a "trailblazer", it was suggested that a State building be named after him.

CONTENT

The bill amends Public Act 173 of 1968, which provides for the naming of certain State buildings, to rename the State Treasury Building as the "Richard H. Austin Building".

The Act provides that the building occupied by the Department of Treasury is designated as the State Treasury Building. The bill deletes the reference to occupancy by the Department of Treasury, in addition to renaming the building.

The bill will take effect on March 30, 2006.

ARGUMENTS

(Please note: The arguments contained in this analysis originate from sources outside the Senate Fiscal Agency. The Senate Fiscal Agency neither supports nor opposes legislation.)

Supporting Argument

Richard H. Austin was born in Alabama and moved to Detroit with his family at the age of 11. He was the valedictorian of his graduating class at Cass Technical High School and earned his bachelor's degree from the Detroit Institute of Technology. He became the State's first African-American certified public accountant, and went on to form the Austin, Washington and Davenport accounting firm with two associates. Richard Austin also was the first African-American to be elected to the position of Wayne County Auditor, and the first African-American to be elected to a statewide office, other than the State Supreme Court, when he was elected Secretary of State in 1970. He was reelected five times and served until 1994, making him the longest-serving Secretary of State in Michigan's history.

Richard Austin was an advocate of traffic safety, supporting mandatory seat belt and motorcycle helmet laws, as well as other driver education and safety measures. During his tenure as the Secretary of State, he implemented the replacement of vehicle registration tabs (as opposed to annual license plate replacement) and instituted mail renewals, saving the State and taxpayers time and money. Additionally, he worked to make Michigan the first state to implement voter registration in conjunction with driver licensing.

In recognition of Richard Austin's academic and professional accomplishments, his function as a role model, and his contributions to the public, it is fitting to name the State Treasury Building, which houses the Secretary of State's Office, after him.
