Second Analysis (1-18-11)

BRIEF SUMMARY: Together, the bills would require a presentence investigation (PSI) report be given to a prosecutor, defendant's attorney, and a defendant who is not represented by an attorney at least two business days prior to sentencing; allow those individuals to keep the copy of the PSI report; and prohibit certain information from being included in a PSI report.

FISCAL IMPACT: The bills would have no significant fiscal impact on the state or on local units of government. The requirement that certain information related to the victim be redacted from presentence investigation reports upon request could impose additional work on the Department of Corrections or local courts. However, this work is likely to be met through existing resources.

THE APPARENT PROBLEM:

After a defendant is convicted of a crime and before the sentence is handed down, a presentence investigation (PSI) report must be prepared by a probation officer and provided to the court. Among other things, the PSI report describes the background and character of the defendant and is used by the court to determine an appropriate sentence. A PSI report is not a public record and so access is restricted. Under statute, the court must allow the prosecutor, defendant's attorney, and the defendant to review the PSI report before sentencing (MCL 771.14). Though the statute does not specifically authorize a copy to be given to the parties, it has been the practice to allow the copies of the PSI report to be retained.

In 2010, the Michigan Supreme Court adopted several amendments to court rules pertaining to PSI reports. Under the changes, copies of the report must be provided at least two business days before the sentencing date to the prosecutor, to the defendant's attorney, or to the defendant if not represented by an attorney. A party who did not receive the report within the new time period may file a motion to adjourn and reschedule the sentencing date so as to have time to obtain and review the report. Certain information is also prohibited from being included in the PSI report, such as the home address or telephone number of a victim or witness. However, the recently adopted amendments also changed the current practice of allowing the parties to retain copies of the PSI reports.

In response to concerns raised by the Prosecuting Attorneys Association of Michigan (PAAM) and the Criminal Defense Attorneys of Michigan (CDAM) over losing the ability to retain a copy of a PSI report, the Court once again proposed to amend the court rules to specifically permit a prosecutor, defense attorney, or defendant if not represented by an attorney, to retain a copy of the report. However, noting that this amendment would conflict with an existing provision in the Corrections Code that restricts access to PSI reports to judges, probation officers, and law enforcement agencies (MCL 791.229), the Court delayed the effective date of the amendment until January 1, 2011, to give the Legislature, if it chose to do so, time to resolve the conflict in statute. Without a legislative "fix" to clarify who has access to a PSI report, the scope of that access, and under what circumstances, the order of the Court allowing prosecutors and defense attorneys to retain copies of the PSI report will take effect in January of next year, even though seemingly still at odds with statute.

THE CONTENT OF THE BILLS:

The bills would amend provisions in different acts relating to the dissemination of presentence investigation reports. The bills are tie-barred to each other, meaning that neither bill can take effect unless the other one is also enacted into law.

House Bill 6389 would amend the Code of Criminal Procedure (MCL 771.14). Currently, the court must permit the prosecutor, the defendant's attorney, and the defendant to review the presentence investigation report (PSI) before sentencing.

Under the bill, a copy of the PSI and, if amended or corrected by either party, any amended report, would have to be provided to the prosecutor and the defendant's attorney. The PSI would have to be provided at least two business days before sentencing unless that period was waived by the defendant. The prosecutor and the defendant's attorney would have the right to retain the copy of the report and amended report. In like manner, a defendant who was not represented by counsel would have to be provided a copy of the PSI or amended report and would have the same right to retain the copy.

With some exceptions, the bill would specify that a PSI could not include the address or phone number for the home, workplace, or place of worship of a victim or witness or a family member of a victim or witness. Upon request, any other address or telephone number that would reveal the location of a victim or witness would be exempted from disclosure. An address that was used to identify the place of the crime or to impose conditions of release from custody necessary for the protection of a named individual could be included in a PSI.

Senate Bill 1491 would amend the Corrections Code (MCL 791.229). Currently, the act specifies that all records and reports of investigations made by a probation officer, and all case histories of probationers, are privileged or confidential communications and not open to public inspections. Access is given to judges and probation officers, and the attorney general, auditor general, and law enforcement agencies must also be permitted to access these reports. Under the bill, the restricted access would apply except as otherwise permitted by law.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION:

Presentence investigation report

A presentence investigation (PSI) report includes information such as prior criminal history, a description of the offense for which the defendant is about to be sentenced, marital status, financial status, medical history, the impact statement(s) by victim(s) and whether harm was done to the victim(s), the defendant's statement, applicable sentencing guidelines, evaluation of the probable adjustment of the defendant in the community based upon factual information, and sentencing recommendations that include whether multiple offenses are required or allowed to be served consecutively.

Order of the Court

July 1, 2010, the Michigan Supreme Court issued a contingency order proposing an amendment allowing prosecutors, defense counsel, and defendants to retain a copy of the presentence investigation report. Understanding that this proposed amendment is at odds with MCL 791.229, which restricts access to the reports for reasons of confidentiality, and also with subsequent case law which has expanded who may review and receive the reports, the Court invited interested parties to approach the Legislature to resolve the conflict. However, if the Legislature does not enact legislation by the end of the year, the Court order will go into effect January 1, 2011.

According to a dissenting opinion by Justice Corrigan, the contingency aspect of the Court's order not only breaks with precedent, but amounts to an "improper ultimatum to the Legislature" and "demonstrates a troubling lack of regard for the separation of powers." For those and other reasons, Justice Corrigan objected to inclusion of the contingency aspect in the Court's order. She was joined in the dissent by Justices Young and Markman.

ARGUMENTS:

For:

The legislation is needed to clarify who has lawful access to a presentence investigation (PSI) report, under what circumstances, and the scope of that access (such as retaining a copy). Currently, court rules are silent as to retention of the reports, but a proposed amendment allowing the parties to keep a copy of the PSI report will take effect at the beginning of 2011. However, this amendment to the court rules directly contradicts a provision within the Corrections Code that (1) states that all reports of investigations made by probation officers are confidential, and (2) limits access to judges and probation officers, though probation officials may permit the attorney general, auditor general, and law enforcement agencies access to the reports. Adding to the confusion is a provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure that requires a court to permit a prosecutor, defense attorney, and the defendant to review the PSI report, but does not address whether they can keep the copy of the report. Further, subsequent case law has expanded the circumstances under which a PSI report may be disseminated. If the bills under consideration are not enacted, the court rule will go into effect and the confusion will continue.

Senate Bill 1491 will address the problem by including in the Corrections Code a reference to other lawful circumstances under which other parties may access PSI reports. House Bill 6389 will specifically allow a prosecutor, defendant's attorney, and a defendant who is not represented by counsel to review the PSI report before sentencing and to receive a copy of the report at least two business days before sentencing, unless the defendant waives the right to a copy within that time period. The bill will also incorporate the same restrictions on the types of information that cannot be included in a PSI report that are currently in court rules. Thus, enactment of the bills will bring statutory provisions in line with each other and the court rules.

Against:

House Bill 6389 as introduced would have required copies of the PSI report to be given to all defendants, not just to those choosing to act as their own counsel or without counsel. Restoring that provision would preserve an important right of each defendant - that is, to have an opportunity to review the PSI before sentencing. Otherwise, a defendant is dependent on a busy or overburdened attorney (especially in the case of public defenders) to find the time to provide a copy with sufficient time for the defendant to properly review it; for example, earlier than moments before the sentencing hearing begins.

Response:

The bill reflects recent changes to the court rules that require a copy of the PSI to be provided only to defendants who are representing themselves, or are otherwise without attorney representation. According to the Department of Corrections, which would have the responsibility to make and distribute the copies, supplying all defendants with copies of the PSI report would put a strain on limited staff and financial resources.
